I am sure you misunderstood. I could not have said so: for Forrest has not even hinted to me the "unbappy cause." But he did eay, and so I said to you, that HE was NOT THE CAUSE—It was brought about by no act of his—that had it been, he might think very differently of the amount of alimony.

was Not the cause—It was brought about by the his-that had it been, he might think very differently of the amount of alimony.

I would not be misunderstood in any matter; but in one tike this, where my deep anxiety is to keep the harmony entire that now exists. I hope that all I say from the one to the other shall not be misconceived.

Another point, to which Forrest has made no reference whatever—viz., that I was the reast to propose $2,000. My impression is very strong on that point; I think I did not; but when the sum was named to me, I said that the law, if resorted to, would allow as large a sum, and perhaps larger, and that no law should be resorted to in the case. I was and am anxious to bring about as large a sum as will remove all asperity on your side or his.

Ever very truly yours. J. L.

chosed—I reside in Twenty-sixthstreet; in the summer of 1850 I resided at Sixteenth street, directly opposite to the house Mrs. Forrest occupied. Q.—State what you saw at that house.

Mr. O'Conor objected to that kind of evidence, and asked what counsel proposed to prove?

Mr. Van Buren.—I propose to show by this gentleman, who was a neighbor of Mrs. Forrest's, that he was woke up on several occasions in the summer of 1850 by disturbances in that house; that he saw numbers of men seeming out after midoight, and that reveral of them were in a state of intoxication.

Mr. O'Conor considered the evidence offered as irrelevant. Mrs. Forrest is charged with illicit intercourse with several parties, and it was wholly irrelevant to the charge at issue, to attempt to show that gentlemen were seen coming out of her house.

Mr. Van Buren thought it was competent to prove the manner in which this lady was living, when separated from her husband and without any male protector. She says in her sudavit, that her mode of life is not extravagant nor is she in the habit of giving expensive entercalments, or of receiving gentlemen at uneasonable house &c. &c. That affidavit having been read, it was competent for the defendant to faisity her declarations.

Mr. O'Conor did not intend to bring any witnesses to the general good conduct of Mrs. Forrest. He was determined that from the evidence adduced, the jury should judge of her general good conduct without the necessity of bringing any witnesses to that point. He contended that the admission of this testimony would lead to endless irrelevancy.

The Chief Jurice said he did not see that the testimony was admissible. He did not see how any just connection could be pade between the fact of there being disorder in that heuse, and the fact that Mrs. Forrest committed adultery with the parties charged. Any disorderly conduct, or visiting at the house by any of the men charged, would be pertinent; but otherwise he must exclude this testimony.

Mr. Van Buren.—We offer in evidence the meant sn Buren then read the writ of the creat, and re-Fir van Euren then read the writ of is exect, and referred the Court to the order setting it aside, to Mr. Farced a sidealist stating that in order to procure his liberation he gave a bend for $10,000 also the appeal afron the order setting saide the ner set, and to the order of general term of the Supreme Court, on motion to discharge the defendant from arrest on nerver. He then effected the injunction restraining Mr. Forrest from prosecuting his suit in Philadelphia and from visiting Mrs. Forrest for removing her from this State, dated 28 september 1850; he then effected an order granted to amend the complaint, and dissolving residue of injunction; and continued to say —I would now like to give some evidence as to the number of motions that have been made in this care since 24 September, 1850; to this day. I should think there has been one a day at least.

We also wish to prove that a commission was issued to examine Ana Flowers, in June last, the affidarit of Mr. Forrest of Tist May, 1851, and the order to show cause, all of which be put in evidence. He then said:—I don't know that I am called on to give any evidence as to the character of the house in Mercer street from which Anna Flowers is said to have written these notes to Mrs. Forrest, It is a street that gives rise to occasional remarks; and as I happen to live in that street. I am a little sensitive on the subset. (Loud laughter)
Mr. O'Doror said he meant to show that in that proceeding was contemplated a worse deed than they had charged his client with.

my will be time enough when anything is said on the other side as to the character of the house. Mr. Van Buren then referred to certain portions of Mrs. Postest's criginal efficavit, which he had already read at the request of the counsel on the other side and also to Mrs. Forrest's subsequent affidavit of Dec. 20, 1850. He then proposed to read from Mr. Forrest's af-fidavit certain parts as giving as planation of portions of months previously.

Mr. O Choor replied, and relied upon the ruling made before by the court on the same point.

The Chief Justice raid that the reasons he before gave for excluding the subdivit, still applies to the present ofter. Re had admitted the "Consucto" letter, which was set forth in Mr. Forrest's affidavit, because it was largely referred to by Mrs. Forrest in her affidavit. It is quite apparent that Mr. and Mrs. Forrest contradict each other in their sfidavits; but if the defendant thought proper to give Mrs. Forrest's affidavit in evicace he cannot give Mrs. Forrest's affidavit in evicace has it is necessary to make any portions of Mrs. Forrest's affidavit intelligible. The court therefore, did not consider the present offer admissible.

Nr. Van Buren than read the paper marked No. 38, and identified by Mr. Lawson.—

With the siscere and awful conviction that I now stand in the presence of Almighty God, I call him to witness and record the fruth of what I now utter and also that I utter it without mental resurvation. character of Anna?

Mr. Van Buren supposed that this inquiry was not relevant. They have no right to show the general character of a child of thirteen or fourteen years of age for the purpose of impeaching her testimony when a woman some thirteen or fourteen years afterwards.

Mr. O'Conor contended that it was not possible always to bring down the evidence of character to the time of testifying, and that they might give in evidence generally what the character had been before.

The chief Justice said, the examination went to the general character. The witness spoke of 1838. He did not remember that the evidence of general character was to be confined to any particular period, though the remoteness of the time might render it of little importance and cause it to have little weight with the jury, as a years person might have done something to prejudice her in the opinion of her fellow-servants and others, and it might and might not be of much importance; but he did not know that it was incompetent.

Mr. Van Buren excepted to this ruling. Exception noted.

Witness continued. Q.—Did you at that time become acquainted with the general character of Anna Dempsey. A.—She was in my family only about ten days; of course I didn't know anything against her character, or I would not have employed her; she stated her age to be fourteen or fitteen at that time; her character was bad. Q.—From the degree and extent to which you found her character to be bad, would you believe her on oath!

Mr. Van Buren objected. The Gourt admitted, and counsel excepted. Question repeated. A.—Unless her character has changed materially, I would not believe her under oath; I have not seen her since then; I think I took her to the Upper Police.

Mr. Van Buren objected.

The Chief Justice—As at present advised I do not think it is competent to effer any evidence to show that transaction.

Q.—How many servants had you at that time?

Anna Flowers made an incorrect statement as to that transaction.

Q.— How many servants had you at that time?

Mr. Van Buren objected. The object of the question is again to contradict her.

Mr O'Coner—I purpose to show that Anna Flowers stole money from Dr. Lee several times, that she stole a watch by going out on the roof of the house and into Miss Forbes, who resided next door; and that Dr. Lee had no little girl at that time named Mangaret as a servant; that the ends event was a woman named Bridget; and that Anna Flowers whole story of her being the innocent receiver of the watch from the other servant, was untrue.

Mr. Van Buren suggested that a couple of murders might be added to the list (Laughter).

The Chief Justice did not consider the offer competent, and Mr. O'Coner excepted to the ruling.

Mr. O'Conor—An undue familiarity between Mr. Forrest and Miss Glifton, and to establish the case we charge cur opening. Fig. Van Buren-What is the reason that it was not

Nr. Van Buren objected to their re-opening the plaintiff becare. He supposed there would be rery little difference between them as to the rule of law, and the exceptions were very limited. In this case there were two or three research why there should not be any. The court would remember the manner in which the plaintiff had rested the case. He ('Nr. Van Buren) had then asked the court to require her to enhanct the testimony, and not to intreduce any further, and though they would not be about the testimony, and not to intreduce any further, and though they would not say that he thought he did get them to say it was derivable they should notify either as to the anture of the evidence they whiled to get in. There was no unvarying rule of law, it was an intent in the discretion of the court. One point was that this was in fact, very shuffar to a criminal case, in which the presentor was compelled to exhaunt his festimony; and he thought this similarity ought to prevent the admission of further testimony by the court is, the services of a sound discretion. The defendant too, having in view, the vast number of charges in this case, satisfied himself that the case was closed, and had turned his attention to the recriminating charges, in support of which it was necessary for him to call testimony. Again, nearly all these charges had been the subject of another and in the Supreme Court, in which they were all denied, and the suit, absordaned. The case presented itself in two mepoter-rises, the effect that the course adopted had upon them. They did not suppose, they had not right to suppose they had not right to suppose they had not applied and the suit, absordant in this was to be allowed there was no such things as seeing where thought exhausted, and where it requires any explanation, or that set up by the defendant requires real bands of them, but confined themselve entirely to those charges finestpating the plaintiff the plaintiff would be a brief in quity; but jurons, witnesses, court, and all interested considere of public morality, public justice, and private right.

Mr. Van Buren replied, resiling the law, as laid down in Ford vs. Niles, lat Hill, p. 300. Mrs. Forrest had stated in her complicate contain and numerous acts of adultery in the years 1849 to 1844. Inclusive—in all, some fifty or a hundred instances. Therefore, she should have been certain what she could prove, and had not asked for have to offer further testimony at the time she restell her case; on the contrary the counsel had just stated that he had not then any more to offer. It was an experiment to see whether the defendant would not rest satisfied with an acquittal of the charges against him. It was contended that if her established the defendant innocence, and plaintiff significance against the paintiff, he could either obtain a judgment of divorce in the suit, or use the record as conclusive evidence for that purpose in accorder.

The Chief Justice raid—it seemed to be conteded on paintiff he could either obtain a judgment of diverce in this suit, or use the record as conclusive evidence for that purpose in another.

The Chief Justice raid—it seemed to be conceded on all hands, that whether any perty should be permitted to re open was in the discretion of the court, and it was not possible to prescribe any precise rule. Now, he was seed aware that judges had viewed this in a different light, but he had seldom tried cases where he was not inclined to allow them to be to opened, where he was not inclined to allow them to be to opened, where he saw it would tend to terrimate litigation and elicit fruit. He was mainly guided by this. One question was, whether the defendant would he as well propared to meet it now as if produced originally. Now in this particular case. Allowable get in the same and the was a clear indication that it might under circumstances, be opened again; and he had no reason to hellow here that Mr. Forcest was not as well systems to meet it now assaffact, and he raw no good reason why the truth should be abut out and he never found justice promoted by too strict an application of eaching alreles. There was no formal application that he interested to be at liberty to open again; but the contrasty application was altimity devided and the question reserved to the broad discretion of the court. Now, in ordinary cases, where a plainful falled to make out is case he had a remody by other means. He might allow the proving many facts and circumstances. Mrs. Forcest stated certain allegations of the result with his case unprejudiced as he remembered having frequently elected to do when at the car. Mrs. Forcest mat affect in the reidence as to an issue involving many facts and circumstances. Mrs. Forcest stated certain allegation and her side which he donled and in reply charged her with certain acts of adultery. If she had proved him guilty, it was quite competent to go one and if she were also proven guilty to obtain judgment squint a divorce. If she only was she was guilty, he could serve no other purpose but to shut out truth. And in the exercise of his sound discretion, he thought himself justified in letting this go on.

(...—To witness—Ind you see Mr. Forrest and Josephine Chiron together at any time in the year 1542? (Laughter.)

Mr. Van Buren—So am I. (Loud laughter.) That's all Previous to the adjournment, the Chief Justice would remark, that it was somewhat uncertain whether they could sit in this, the (Supreme Court room) on Monday, as the Judges of that Court intimated that they would require it. The jury and parties to the sait, would, however, ment there and it could be then settled as to where the trial would be continued.

Mr. O'Conor remarked, that it would be well if the audience who attended here daily, were reminded that they were not in a theatre, and that laughter and appliance were chilterjout of place in a court of justice.

The Chief Justice said he had endeavored frequently to suppress it.

Great Freshet-Danage to Manufacturing Establishments. Our usually quiet little village was thrown into a great state of excitement this morning by a freshet in the Esopus creek, caused by the recent rains. As near as I can accertain the particulars are as follows .- During last evening the ice broke up in the creek in the woods above this village, came down and formed a dam at the above this village, came down and formed a dam at the head of the millpond, where it remained firm till about haif past this morning, when it gave way, and, borne up by the infuriated waters, came heaving and pitching down, laying in waste everything sithin its reason; driving people from their dweitings, destroying a large quantity of lead in process of corresion at the lead works and perfectly inundating the iron works, riphig up his docks staving in its store house, etc. etc. At the time the angry element rushed into the iron works, the men were at their respective duties, and had to make all possible haste to escape with their lives. The loss sustained by the lead works and iron works will probably fail not far short of five thousend dollars. At the time I write this the water has failen considerable, and no further danger is apprehended. apprehended.
